Nick has played a significant role in developing Bodyproject from new business startup in 2007 to its current position as one of the North West's high growth companies.

Nick's vast experience encompasses all aspects of leadership, fiduciary board-level direction, governance and internal control, partnerships and programme management.

His 18-year career in communications has covered many disciplines including advertising, political affairs, internal communications, media, corporate responsibility, marketing, and public relations.

A former Director of Communications at United Utilities, and Head of Public Relations at Information Technology Services Agency, Nick has led large teams and has commercial, contract, and procurement management experience working with budgets of over £5 million. He is a member of the Institute of Directors and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts.

As a high performance business coach Nick believes it is imperative that every employee cares deeply about business success; that they are fully involved and able and eager to rise to the challenges of sustainability. For Nick this is a vital sign - a check on the pulse of the organisation - and it gives him a pretty accurate impression of overall business health.

For Nick "work is about more than making a living - it should be meaningful and substantive." Charity, social and community enterprise, and corporate and social responsibility programmes are close to Nick's heart and he has invested a significant amount of his personal time and energies over the past decade into his roles as Trustee Director at The Tim Parry Jonathan Ball Foundation for Peace, and Chairman at The Citadel Arts Centre Ltd. Nick has unremitting aspirations for the Bodyproject Foundation.
